Impaired drivers nabbed by Calgary police are getting younger, drunker and no longer predominantly male.

Furthermore, those able to escape heavy police presence in the downtown core are often doing incomprehensibly high speeds on major thoroughfares when they run into vehicles operated by innocent individuals.

These anecdotal offerings from police working the front line are disturbing, as far as Sgt. Colin Foster is concerned.

"There is only so much we can do," said Foster, who works as a collision reconstruction expert. "It really has to come down to a person's own decision making."

headlines early on this year.

On Saturday, a 20-year-old was charged with two counts of impaired driving after police allege he rear-ended a taxi in the 9300 block of Macleod Trail, injuring four people.

This incident came on the heels of an even more serious collision in the early morning hours Jan. 8 that claimed the lives of two individuals, including University of Calgary engineering student Arsh Brar.

Following the crash, police charged 25-year-old Amie Nottbrock with two counts of impaired driving causing death and two counts of dangerous driving causing death.

"Everything needs to change," said Arsh's father, Harvinder Brar, Sunday. "I would like to see more police outside of bars and liquor stores checking people as they come out."

A Metro analysis of fatal collisions where alcohol is considered a factor revealed the majority occur far from the city core on major thoroughfares with high speed limits.

Alberta Solicitor General Jonathan Denis said impaired drivers will speed regardless of the posted limits, but he believes progress may be made with education initiatives that specifically target youth.

"They may not necessarily know what someone like me who has been driving for 20 years does," he said.

Ecstasy may be cause of death

Southern Alberta RCMP are investigating what appears to be another death linked to the drug ecstasy.

Emergency responders were called to a residence in Nanton, located an hour south of Calgary, around 2:20 p.m.

Inside, they found a 23-year-old man who witnesses said had taken an undisclosed substance around noon. He was rushed to hospital but died a short time later.

Reports indicated the drug used was likely ecstasy, but investigators are waiting for an autopsy and toxicology report Monday before releasing details publicly. Health officials have warned the public about the dangers of taking ecstasy in recent weeks following five overdoses in Calgary. METRO

Bodycheck debate revisited

► Hockey Calgary committee seeks feedback from the public ► Other provinces have experimented with introducing contact at different ages

JEREMY NOLAÏS
@METRONEWS.CA

Tabatha Wood was concerned when her 16-year-old, hockey-playing son suffered his first concussion after being legally bodychecked in November, but it wasn't enough to sway her opinion on contact.

"It's part of the game," she said Sunday at a Calgary rink. "I personally don't think anything needs to be changed."

Feedback from parents like Wood and other interested members of the public is currently being sought by Hockey Calgary as part of a committee's exploration on bodychecking.

"Obviously it's a high-profile subject in the NHL," said Todd Millar, the organization's president. "From there, everything flows down and we have lots of parents talking to us about it, injuries and concussions and so on."

The committee will issue a formal recommendation to the Hockey Calgary board of directors in March. It could advocate for anything from a full ban on contact to leaving current protocols alone and continuing to introduce bodychecking at the pee-wee level.

"The opinions tend to be very passionate on both

► A link to Hockey Calgary's survey on bodychecking can be found on the organization's homepage at hockeycalgary.ca.

► Both Saskatchewan and Ontario have experimented with introducing bodychecking earlier at the atom level, but Hockey Canada eventually moved to shut down those pilot projects.

► Quebec now holds off on contact in hockey until the bantam level. A study published by University of Calgary researcher Dr. Carolyn Emery last year found a three-fold increase in risk of injury and four-fold increase in the risk of concussion among minor hockey players in Alberta when compared with those in Quebec.

sides of the equation," Millar said.

Parents speaking to Metro Sunday said contact should remain in the game, but some like Gen Howland would be open to it being introduced at a later age.

"If they waited till bantam it would help with the size difference and maturity, I think," said the mother of three minor hockey players.

► The Hilliers, seen in this 2009 family photo, may wait decades to understand what impact chemicals released from a gas spill near their Calgary home has had on their health.

Fears linger for family

► Exposure to benzene, other chemicals could impact children over the long term, mother fears

More than a year after being forced from their dream home by a major gas spill nearby, a former Calgary family says they are living a nightmare that may last decades.

Melinda Hillier, her husband John, their two kids and her teenaged younger brother were all living inside a residence on Bow Crescent NW in April 2010 when they began to notice a strong odour.

It was soon revealed that thousands of litres of gas were leaking from an adjacent Gas Plus site, but Melinda said officials dodged questions about possible safety risks.

"Me and the boys had headaches and we were sleeping all the time," she said. "It was very concerning."

Eight months after the spill, Alberta Environment

20 One testing canister placed in the Hilliers' home after the Gas Plus spill revealed benzene concentrations approximately 20 times over what is considered safe.

announced the Hilliers' residence and two others had been condemned amid safety fears over high levels of benzene and other hydrocarbon chemicals present in the homes.

The Hilliers eventually moved to the community of Citadel but couldn't get comfortable. They have since returned to their original home in Nova Scotia and now visit a clinic for physician-ordered testing every three months for possible lingering effects from the chemicals in their former home.

"It stresses us out constantly," she said. "We were told (by doctors) it can affect the boys' reproductive organs and we won't even know until they are in their 20s or 30s and decide to have children of their own."

But area Ald. Dale Hodges remains skeptical of the risk posed to families on Bow Crescent.

"How can anyone predict the health impact 25 years out?" he said.

An Alberta Health Services official told Metro last year that health complications associated with benzene only come from long-term exposure, but couldn't specifically state whether the Hilliers were at risk.

"It's that unknown that keeps me up at night," Melinda said.

Tunnel costs to be tallied for council

Council will get a breakdown of the total costs for the airport tunnel today in response to a request from an alderman.

In November, Ald.

Gord Lowe asked for a summary of all the costs associated with the tunnel, including interchanges that will have to be built in the coming years to support the new infrastructure.

While the immediate costs to build the tunnel are nearly $295 million, the final tally is likely to be more than $525 million, the city administration says.

Construction of the tunnel is underway.

Roughnecks fans badger team to bring back dumped mascot

► Lacrosse team offers no explanation for switch to Honey Badger ► Fans rally support for Derrick Driller

@METRONEWS.CA

It appears the driller's out and the badger's in.

Despite being the focal point of the team logo, Calgary Roughnecks mascot Derrick Driller, a hard-hat-wearing rig worker with a big-toothed grin, was nowhere to be found at the team's home-opener on Saturday night.

The lacrosse squad's switch to an incongruous critter known as Honey Badger was met with sharp criticism from fans on social media just hours after the team's overtime loss to Colorado.

"I was stunned," said Donna McTaggart, who has attended every single game since the Roughnecks got their franchise in Calgary in 2001. "What the heck is Honey Badger, and what does he have to do with lacrosse? We want Derrick back."

Officials shed little light on the mascot switch Sunday, but it appears the change will be permanent.

"We have just announced a new mascot for this season," spokesperson Joanna French said. "There are still some details to be worked out. It was just his first appearance this last game."

Mascot melee

► Derrick Driller had served as the Roughnecks' mascot since the team was founded in 2001.

► One possible explanation for the choice of Honey Badger as a mascot may stem from a viral YouTube video posted last year of one such animal eating and digging in a voracious manner. The video has been watched more than 34-million times.

Little explanation was offered on the fate of Mr. Driller, but fans haven't given up hope.

"Can we get his picture on milk cartons or something?" Mona Helmer wrote on a Facebook page titled "Bring Back Derrick Driller to the Roughnecks," which had nearly 100 members late Sunday.

Italian cruise ship search continues

- 19 are listed as missing, but number could be higher
- Some passengers may be unregistered: Official

Unregistered passengers might have been aboard the stricken cruise liner that capsized off Giglio, Italy, a top rescue official said Sunday, raising the possibility that the number of missing might be higher than previously announced.

Divers, meanwhile, pulled out a woman's body from the capsized Costa Concordia on Sunday, raising to 13 the number of people dead in the Jan. 13 accident.

Earlier, Italian authorities raised the possibility that the real number of the missing was unknown because some unregistered passengers might have been aboard.

Relatives of missing passengers were briefed Sunday, and met with Pierluigi Foschi, the CEO of Costa Crociere, SpA, the ship's operator.

the rescue effort, told reporters at the island where the ship, with 4,200 people aboard, rammed a reef and sliced open its hull before turning over on its side.

But one of Concordia's officers, who's recovering from a broken leg suffered during the evacuation, dismissed the allegation that such passengers were on the ship.

"Everyone is registered and photographed. Everything's electronic," the Italian news agency ANSA quoted Manrico Giampeironi as saying.

Navy overhauled intelligence as alleged spy lurked in midst

► Former naval officer accused of leaking information to 'foreign entity' and breach of trust ► If proven, violations could land him a life sentence in prison

An unfolding spy drama involving a junior Canadian officer comes amid a determined effort by the Royal Canadian Navy to improve and expand its own intelligence capacity.

Over the past two years, military planners working for the head of the navy have been drawing a "road map" in order to provide decision-makers and warships at sea with better information on possible threats to domestic waters and among international shipping lanes, a series of internal documents reveal.

The strategy was widely circulated among senior echelons of the navy in 2010, according to a briefing list obtained by The Canadian Press.

It could prove to be an intelligence bonanza in the wrong hands, providing insight into how Canadians gather information.

Neither the Harper government, nor National Defence will say whether Sub-Lieut. Jeffrey Delisle had access to the strategy — or early drafts of it.

Just what a potential spy might have been after and for whom has been the subject of frenzied speculation.

Officials have refused to Delisle's career trajectory took him through some of the most senior, sensitive posts within the military, including the highly secure naval intelligence centre known as Trinity.

At Trinity, the accused spy could have had access to so-called tactical-level secrets, such as ship movements and plans.

But defence and intelligence experts say the real gold for a foreign power — be it Russia or some other nation — would lay in the country's methods, code words and placement of assets, both human and electronic.

Defence expert Christian Leuprecht said the Delisle case is bound to

Road map

► The proposed road map was the subject of nearly a dozen high-level briefings over the past 20 months, mostly to the former head of the navy, retired vice-admiral Dean McFadden.

► Concurrent with the development of the new strategy, the navy conducted a highly secret review of its intelligence operations and staff, the findings of which were presented in an Oct. 27, 2010, briefing.

► There was considerable internal debate about deploying naval intelligence teams and whether the service, which has struggled in recent years with staffing, could afford the manpower.

► National Defence was unable to provide comment on the road map strategy and the review when questioned on Friday.

News of her campaign spread across Canada and Campbell has also tweeted to Ellen DeGeneres, but has not heard anything back yet.

"For now I don't know what I'd do if Ellen got involved because I'm just so overwhelmed at the positive response with Justin."

China ushers in new year

► Let there be red trousers, dumplings and fireworks for all ► Chinese worldwide kicking off one of the year's most important celebrations ► Metro looks at some of the many traditions that make up Chinese New Year

NEWS IN BEIJING

“May gold and jade come to fill your home.” China is celebrating its Spring Festival on Monday. This special day marks the start of the Chinese year 4710 and eight days of feasting and wishing peace, happiness and prosperity to each other. In China, the elderly will enjoy the much-awaited annual show on state television while their married children will cook and visit friends and relatives.

The economy and industry will grind to a halt. The trains will be chaos as millions leave the factories and big cities in the south to rush home. But it's worth all the hassle: Chinese New Year is the only time migrant workers get to see their families.

The Spring Festival celebrations are all-day affairs; the louder, the better, in order to scare away evil spirits.

In Shanghai, the malls have swapped their Christmas decorations for red lanterns, dragon statues and loud traditional music. In Beijing, firecrackers are sold at every corner and lit anytime of the day. A word of caution: Two people died last year in the capital because of fireworks.

Chinese New Year is also a food festival. Prime Minister Wen Jiabao enjoys turning up at a worker's house, with a little apron, to cook dumplings in front of the cameras. Most people enjoy cheap yet healthy food, such as sweet clementines, taro cakes, braised catfish and some delicious pudding made of rice and sugar.

Ontario tribunal reviewing restrictions on group homes

Ontario's human-rights tribunal will weigh a challenge to Toronto's zoning rules that experts say could affect how municipalities across the country integrate housing for people with mental illness or disabilities.

City lawyers had asked the tribunal to throw out a complaint against rules that restrict the number and location of group homes, residential care facilities and other types of supportive housing.

The complaint was filed two years ago by a housing advocacy group called The Dream Team, which said the city's bylaws discriminate against people with disabilities by limiting the areas in which they can live.

In a decision released earlier this month, the tribunal refused to dismiss the case and called for a hearing to determine whether the rules contravene the province's human-rights code.

The case could have widespread repercussions, since many municipalities have similar regulations, said Michael Shapcott, housing director for the Wellesley Institute, a policy think-tank in Toronto.

"Almost certainly, what happens in Toronto will have an impact on every other municipality not only in Ontario but across Canada," he said.

"So this is a legal case that a lot of municipalities are looking at very closely."

Provincial human-rights codes across the country prohibit discrimination based on a number of protected grounds, including disability.

Researchers get approval for controversial whale tagging

► Scientific community divided over method to track endangered orcas

Approval has been given for a controversial plan to satellite tag an endangered species of killer whale that plies the waters off the Pacific Coast.

Researchers hope the tracking devices will reveal the orcas' activities during the winter, but another expert said the tagging could harm the vulnerable whales.

Southern resident killer whales are one of the most studied marine mammal species in the world, yet very little is known about where they go and what they eat during the winter months.

Brad Hanson, a wildlife biologist at the National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration, or NOAA, has U.S. government approval to attach the tiny tracking devices to the dorsal fins of six whales per season.

► This handout photo shows an Alaskan transient killer whale 35 days after tagging and two days after the tag came out, revealing exit wounds.

"We're trying to get better information about what they're doing during the winter. This is a period of time where a number of animals seem to disappear from the population," Hanson said in an interview.

"Trying to better understand what the risk factors during the winter are would potentially help management biologists ... make sure we have what's necessary to meet the recovery goals that are in the recovery plan."

But Ken Balcomb, a senior scientist at the Center for Whale Research in Friday Harbour, Wash., has seen other killer whales that were tagged off Alaska and is concerned.

"They're heavy-duty barbs, and the only way (the tag) comes off is tearing away flesh and leaving a golf-ball sized hole."

The current southern resident population is 89, assuming the young calf spotted Dec. 17 is still alive, Balcomb said.

Arab League sticks with Syria mission

- Despite criticism, ministers extends observers' mission
- UN estimates 5,400 killed in Syria since March

Saudi retreat

Saudi Foreign Minister Saud al-Faisal said he'll pull out observers because "the Syrian government did not implement the Arab plan."

- He urged Muslim countries, China, Russia, Europe and the U.S. to put pressure on Assad's government to stop the violence.
- Saudi Arabia has been one of the harshest Arab critics of the crackdown.

Arab League foreign ministers, meeting in Cairo, extended the much-criticized observers' mission for another month, according to a statement from the 22-member organization.

The observer mission is supposed to be the first step toward implementing an Arab League plan to end the Syria crisis. So far, it has not gone well.

Though some credit it with tamping down violence in some places, the Local Coordination Committees activist group said Sunday that 976 people, including 54 children and 28 women, have been killed since the observers began their mission last month. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Arab and Jewish youth hope to set example

A former Israeli peace negotiator says thousands of young Jewish and Arab activists from across the Middle East plan to hold an online peace conference this week on Uri Savir says the Yala Young Leaders group will hold its interactive conference on Monday and Tuesday. U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, actress Sharon Stone, Barcelona soccer coach Pep Guardiola, National Basketball Association commissioner David Stern and others are set to address the virtual gathering.

Savir directs the Peres Center for Peace, a sponsor of the Facebook group. It counts 36,500 members across the region.

Nimrod Ben-Zeev, the site's administrator, says the conference aims to send a message of peace to the region's leaders and create concrete programs, such as online leadership academy.

► Sativex, the world's first pharmaceutical from raw marijuana, may soon be marketed as a treatment for cancer pain.

FIRST RAW CANNABIS DRUG MAY HIT SHELVES IN U.S.

A quarter-century after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved the first prescription drugs based on the main psychoactive ingredient in marijuana, additional medicines derived from or inspired by the cannabis plant itself could soon be making their way to pharmacy shelves, according to drug companies, small biotech firms and university scientists.

A U.K. company, GW Pharma, is in advanced clinical trials for the world's first pharmaceutical developed from raw marijuana instead of synthetic equivalents — a mouth spray it hopes to market in the U.S. as a treatment for cancer pain. It hopes to see FDA approval in late 2013.

Sativex contains two marijuana components — delta 9-THC and cannabidiol. It has been approved in Canada, New Zealand and eight European countries for relieving muscle spasms associated with multiple sclerosis.

Currently, 16 U.S. states and the District of Columbia allow residents to use marijuana legally with doctors' recommendations.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration categorizes pot as a dangerous drug with no medical value, but the availability of Sativex may increase pressure on the federal government to revisit its position.

RIM CEOs resign

► Balsillie and Lazaridis will be replaced by former COO Thorsten Heins
► Pair have been blamed for RIM's struggle to keep pace with competitors

DAVE CHIDLEY/THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Finally bowing to pressure from disgruntled shareholders, the two men who head BlackBerry maker Research in Motion will step down from their positions as co-chief executives of the troubled Canadian high-tech company.

Jim Balsillie and Mike Lazaridis will turn over operational control of RIM to new CEO Thorsten Heins, the company's former chief operating officer, RIM's board said Sunday.

While Balsillie and Lazaridis have left day-to-day operations altogether, they both still remain on RIM's board and will be able to exert significant influence through their large ownership stakes.

A number of RIM's shareholders have demanded changes at the top for months, blaming Balsillie and Lazaridis for years of poor performance that have resulted in a precipitous drop in the company's value — shares in RIM were once so highly priced it was briefly Canada's most valuable company.

Ottawa spending cuts means major job losses, report says

Federal government spending cuts could chop between 60,000 and 68,000 jobs from the public service in the next few years, a report from a progressive think-tank estimates.

A review of three separate rounds of restraint since 2007 suggests once completed in 2015, the federal public service could be trimmed to the lowest staffing levels since 2000.

About 6,300 person years are in the process of being eliminated as a result of department reviews launched between 2007 and 2010, designed to save $1.8 billion.

But that is the "tip of the iceberg," says the report from the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives.

The major impact on jobs will derive from the $2-billion departmental spending freeze announced in 2010 and the $4-billion Strategic and Operating Review that will be part of the coming budget.

ACTIVISTS' SELF-PRAISE IS OUT OF TUNE

HIGH PLAINS DRIFTER

JAMES CALLEN
METRO CALGARY

This week environmental activists from Halifax to Hollywood were celebrating a major victory against Big Oil. It was a milestone to them after a year of activism, petitions, lining up in droves to speak to U.S. Congress and banding together parties of all stripes, from cowboys to Greenpeace to Robert Redford. The environmental movement is celebrating its defeat of the Keystone XL pipeline like Ewoks after the Rebels blew up the Death Star.

I hate to burst their bubble, but they didn't do it. Like a hockey player credited with a goal after an opposing team member kicked it in the net, they're taking the win and running with it, but unfortunately the collapse and eventual presidential denial of the plan had much more to do with U.S. political gamesmanship than anything to do with activism.

President Barack Obama didn't turn down the pipeline strictly due to Nebraska's fragile aquifers. No. The plan was given the thumbs down due to the timeline imposed on the deal by Republicans, who were trying to force the president's hand into a deal that had far wider ramifications than just the XL pipeline.

With an election south of the border looming, Obama and the rest of the Democrats aren't doing anything that would make the Republicans happy and unfortunately for the thousands of jobs at stake and the Canadian economy, the deal got the thumbs down.

On the upside for the environmental movement (or terrorists and radicals to our environment minister), they can't really get the blame from the hippy-haters for pressuring the government to nix the deal. It had nothing to do with pressure from Mother Nature and everything to do with heat from the GOP.

The United States government has already told Transcanada that the company is free to re-apply with a new and improved plan. Chances are with so many jobs and U.S. oil supply security at risk, it's going to go through, particularly if it's done entirely on the president's terms, but we'll have to wait until after the elections.

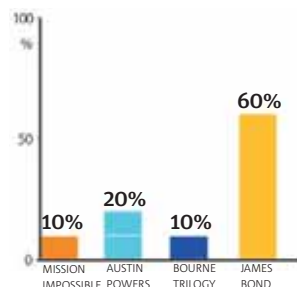

Luckily for the environmentalists, they will have gotten plenty of practice last time around.

Globe trotter

Dutch dream

Laura Dekker shows her passport where an immigration stamp shows the word Guppy, after arriving at Simpson Bay, St. Maarten, on Jan. 21.

The teenager ended a yearlong voyage aboard her sailboat named Guppy, making her the youngest person ever to sail alone around the globe. She was born to parents living on a boat near the coast of New Zealand and by age 10 she began dreaming about crossing the globe.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"There were moments where I was like, 'What the hell am I doing out here?' but I never wanted to stop. ... It's a dream, and I wanted to do it."

LAURA DEKKER

Record not recognized

The Guinness World Records and the World Sailing Speed Record Council did not verify her youngest sailor title, saying they no longer recognize records for youngest sailors to discourage dangerous attempts.

Dutch authorities tried to block Dekker's trip, arguing she was too young to risk her life, while school officials complained she should be in a classroom.

World tour

The teenager covered more than 27,000 nautical miles on a trip with stops that sound like a skim through a travel magazine: The Canary Islands, Panama, the Galapagos Islands, Tonga, Fiji, Bora Bora, Australia, South Africa and now, St. Maarten, from which she set out on Jan. 20, 2011.

Maggie-mania

► She was Europe's first female head of government. But that distinction didn't matter to Margaret Thatcher ► She was the Iron Lady, after all, a woman on a mission to revolutionize her country.

ELISABETH BRAW
SCENE@METRONWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS IN LONDON

"Defeat — I do not recognize the meaning of the word!" Margaret Thatcher wasn't called the Iron Lady for nothing.

And, despite the fact that she left 10 Downing Street 21 years ago, she commands fascination and fear. In fact, the Iron Lady — with Meryl Streep as a supreme Thatcher — has inspired a new Maggie-mania.

"My mother is an ex-hippie who starts crying when one mentions Thatcher, but many people in my generation feel a strong admiration for Thatcher," says Max Wind-Cowie, 26, a public opinion researcher at Demos, a London think tank. "People don't always agree with her policies, but at least you knew what she stood for. With today's politicians you can't really tell what they believe in."

To be sure, the Iron Lady knew what she believed in: individual liberty, free enterprise and anti-Communism.

"Even though there aren't many real Thatcherites, people who subscribe to Thatcher's ideology, left, many people look back at her with nostalgia", notes Richard Vinen, Professor of Modern European History at King's College, London, and author of Thatcher's Britain.

"Especially now, with the EU in crisis, people remember her for her opposition to the EU."

Indeed, today's Britain seems much closer to Thatcher's beliefs than the Britain she ruled. Last year 54 per cent of Britons thought social benefits (to low-income households) were too high, compared to 35 per cent in 1983. "Sympathy for people at the bottom of the heap has evaporated," notes Wind-Cowie.

Thatcher's actions

- 1 Kept Britain out of the single European currency.
- 2 Marginalized Britain's powerful trade unions. The move caused high unemployment, and anger, in Britain's North.
- 3 Privatized gas, electricity, telephony, British Airways and British Rail.
- 4 Cut welfare benefits.
- 5 Stood up to the Soviet Union, supported by Ronald Reagan.
- 6 Won the Falklands War against Argentina.

A day in the life of Maggie

The champion of individual responsibility can't remember anything, let alone take care of herself.

Margaret Thatcher suffers from dementia. "Though there's currently a lot of research into its causes, dementia is still an illness without a cure," explains Dr. Claudia Cooper, Lecturer in old-age psychiatry at University College, London.

"Patients often get lost or forget to eat, and they can also get depression or physical health problems."

The Iron Lady, ruler of the box office

A political movie, how dull. But Meryl Streep as Maggie Thatcher is a completely different matter.

During its first weekend in British cinemas, The Iron Lady captured the top box office spot, taking over $5 million.

This figure is nearly three times the box office achieved by The Queen when it opened in 2006.

Twentieth Century Fox, the film's distributor, reported that The Iron Lady even did well in Britain's North, where Thatcher remains disliked, even loathed. Meryl Streep won a Golden Globe for the role.

Gimme 5, up high

► With Red Tails opening this past weekend, here's a look at five great movies about airplanes

Red Tails, in theatres now, is about the first black fighter pilots in the United States: the Tuskegee Airmen who finally saw battle in the skies over Europe during the Second World War.

It's a story that's very much worth telling. As well, it presents a good opportunity to take a look at five movies about airplanes that really do soar.

CHRISTY LEMIRE/
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Airplane! (1980)

Not just one of the best airplane movies ever, not just one of the best comedies ever.

This is one of my absolute favourite movies ever, regardless of genre. When the LA Film Critics Association asked its members to fill out a questionnaire and choose one movie everyone should see, I didn't pick Citizen Kane. I picked this. It's a dead-on spoof of all those 1970s Airport disaster movies, the one to which all subsequent parodies have aspired. The tone is so perfect, the cast is so great, and the script is so jammed with classic lines.

Wings (1927)

This was the first film to win the Academy Award for best picture and the only silent film ever to achieve that honour.

A restored print of Wings recently was shown to a packed house at the Motion Picture Academy with live organ accompaniment, and it was a huge treat to see it in that setting. This tale of First World War fighter pilots, starring Charles Rogers, Richard Arlen and an insanely adorable Clara Bow, was at the time the most expensive movie Paramount had ever made. The budget was set at $1.2 million but it ballooned to $2.1 million.

United 93 (2006)

Paul Greengrass' reenactment of the hijacking of United Airlines Flight 93 on Sept. 11, 2001, which crashed into a Pennsylvania field after passengers foiled the terrorist plot, sounded like a daunting prospect. We know all too well how it's going to end long before it begins, and his documentary-style realism would surely add to the agony. But it is that very realism and Greengrass' respectful attention to detail that make it impossible not to feel engrossed with every fibre in your being. This film is definitely an edge-of-your-seat thriller.

Top Gun (1986)

This is the 1980s in film form: all the bombast and patriotism, all the big hair and shoulder pads, with Tom Cruise at the height of his powers playing a fighter pilot named — in all seriousness — Maverick. Cruise was still young and sexy back then, and Top Gun wasn't exactly subtle in celebrating his cocky, brash screen persona. Or as his superior puts it in scolding him: "Son, your ego is writing checks your body can't cash." Cruise, Anthony Edwards and Val Kilmer play students at an elite flying academy.

North by Northwest (1959)

This is a cheat, I will acknowledge that. But the crop-duster scene is so iconic that when I think of movies about airplanes, I think of this. It isn't just one of the most famous scenes in an Alfred Hitchcock film, it's one of the most famous scenes in film history, period. Cary Grant, a victim of mistaken identity who finds himself wrongly accused of murder, goes on the run. In his hunt for clues to the mystery, he winds up on a rural highway in the middle of nowhere, where he's repeatedly buzzed by an armed crop-dusting plane.

An electric journey

► Neil Young picks up the pace with new concert film, played recently at the Slamdance Film Festival

Neil Young recalls how his first concert film with director Jonathan Demme was a lush, stately tribute to country music.

He says their latest, Neil Young Journeys, is more like an electric bolt, with a "grinding, blinding beauty to it."

Their 2006 film Neil Young: Heart of Gold premiered at the Sundance Film Festival and was a reflective, comforting chronicle of two shows Young performed at Nashville's Ryman Auditorium alongside such longtime musical comrades as Emmylou Harris, Ben Keith and Spooner Oldham.

Journeys is a raw, thunderous counterpart, filmed by Demme at Toronto's Massey Hall during the closing shows of Young's solo tour last year. Solo often implies intimate and acoustic, but Young wails away on electric guitar, harmonica, piano and organ throughout the show.

The new film played Saturday at the Slamdance

► Neil Young

Film Festival, a rival showcase to Sundance. Demme says it was a fitting place because both Slamdance and the film share something of a "bad-boy" attitude.

"Journeys is so different from Heart of Gold. It's like the other side of the universe," Young, 66, said in an interview alongside Demme. "Heart of Gold was a massive production with great caretaking to present this whole image of this forgotten style of presenting music, in this great old chapel of country music. ...

Partnership

"This film we just made is so opposite of that. It's just one person. The sound is completely different and the attitude of it is different. The look is different. ... The sounds are kind of enveloping. You get to move way inside, whereas, Heart of Gold, you're way back, going, 'Oh, it's beautiful seeing it from the back, seeing all these beautiful people, these great musicians.' And this one here, you're like inside my instrument, inside the distortion of the guitar. There's nothing in the way."

Plenty of swag to go around

Where there are celebrities, there is swag, and the Sundance Film Festival is no exception. Nearly a dozen gift suites opened their doors Friday afternoon along Park City, Utah's Main Street.

Kate Bosworth, Andy Samberg, Emma Roberts and Rashida Jones are among the famous folks who stopped by the VEVO PowerStation SOREL Suite, where they could indulge in moisturizing facials and lip treatments from Fresh cosmetics and outfit their feet in snow-ready footwear.

The Bertolli Meal Soup Chalet served up bowls of hot soup and handed out sunglasses and Lumene skincare products to visitors.

Rashida shares spotlight

Rashida Jones was almost upstaged by her famous father, Quincy Jones, at the Sundance premiere of her film, Celeste and Jesse Forever, but the actress and screenwriter didn't mind.

"He's what he is and he will always be and has always been, way before I was here," Jones said Saturday. "I feel lucky to hang out with him. And we're different, too. People like us for different reasons."

She added that her dad loved the film, which explores the nature of relationships, marriage and its meaning in society.

Jones' first screenwriting effort (with co-writer Will McCormack) emerged from "pain, lots of pain."

"We're both very deeply feeling people, and we love to talk about relationships and love and feelings," she said.

Jones stars in the film alongside Andy Samberg, Emma Roberts and Elijah Wood.

The softer side of couture

► The Project Runway All Stars prove reality TV isn't always about being horrible to your fellow contestants
► But the claws may still come out this season ► Designers have only six hours to complete their next challenge

SCENE@METRONWS.CA

Aside from occasional dust-ups at the Neiman Marcus accessory wall, Project Runway is one reality show that isn't known for its backbiting.

At a New York screening of the spin-off Project Runway All Stars contestants — including the dashing Austin Scarlett in beads and a bow tie — broke from the usual red carpet decorum to greet each other with squeals and hugs.

"I keep in touch with a lot of them," said Kara Janx. "I've formed some really solid relationships."

So how do these "all stars" — favourite designers from the first eight seasons of Project Runway who are competing once again in a new series of fashion challenges — make it work the second time around?

"You need to admire your fellow designers and get inspired by each other," said Kenley Collins, wearing her trademark red lipstick. "Make your life a little easier and just get along!"

"She's such a diva," joked Michael Costello, cutting in to throw an arm around Collins.

Meanwhile, Janx cited "mutual respect, mutual understanding" as the key.

"I don't feel like you have to step on toes to get ahead," she said. "You're just so curious to see what other designers will bring to the table."

It's not just contestants who noticed the camaraderie on set.

"Fashion is a community," said designer Isaac Mizrahi, one of the show's judges. But that all might change in an upcoming episode, when the designers are given only six hours to complete a challenge.

Are Zac and Taylor a hot new item?

Zac Efron and Taylor Swift shared a flirty dinner in L.A. recently, prompting speculation that the two young stars are dating, according to Hollyscoop.

Sources say the pair arrived at Italian restaurant Pace together in Efron's Audi and "were deep in conversation and very glib."

But folks from both Efron and Swift's camps say it was totally platonic. They were in L.A. doing press stuff together, and after they were done, they decided to grab dinner," a source close to Swift says. "Taylor thinks Zac's cute ... [but] they are on totally different wavelengths."

On last week's Modern Family, toddler Lily dropped an F-bomb, to the utter horror of her parents.

The character is two-and-a-half-years old. The episode's title? Little Bo Bleep. This was the first time a scripted family TV show has had a child utter the profanity that rhymes with puck. (Don't worry, it wasn't audible to the viewer.)

As the owner of a horrible potty mouth, I could not relate to this more.

The fact is, actually, that I have dropped my cussing dramatically since the birth of my first child. And yet ... it was just a couple of years ago that my parents were watching my children when my then two-and-a-half-year old said "s—."

The worst thing? She used it correctly. Like, she broke something and dropped the S-bomb. My mother is a public school teacher who has literally never cussed. My dad is a pastor. When my mom politely told me the news, I just immediately responded by apologizing. There was no use pretending that she had picked it up from anyone but me. Everyone knows I have problems cussing.

Still, it was an important moment that led to further efforts to stop my sailor-level vocabulary. But apparently, it's not enough.

During last week's football game, I think I lost years off my life as I cheered. Every time something bad happened, I modified cuss words. Or, well, I cussed in foreign languages. My husband told me to watch it around the kids. I hate it when he's right.

Another friend told me about how her kids were playing with friends in the neighborhood while parents sat outside and chatted. The kids were on bikes and one kid cut another kid off at the end of the cul-de-sac. "Get out of the way,

A—hole" one little boy exclaimed, not even particularly upset. The father of that child, blushing, told the boy to watch his language and then said something about how he'd have to talk to him later. But everyone laughed nervously because they knew the kid had picked it up from his parents.

And this is the shame of the child's potty mouth. It's

No Cussing Club

Even before the episode aired last week, an anti-profanity crusader asked ABC to pull the episode. McKay Hatch, 18, founded the No Cussing Club in 2007. He asked his club's members, whom he said number 35,000 in the U.S. and about three dozen other countries, to complain to ABC.

Protestors' take

"Our main goal is to stop this from happening," said Hatch. "If we don't, at least ABC knows that people all over the world don't want to have a two-year-old saying the 'F-bomb' on TV. We hope they know better."

The network's take

"We thought it was a very natural story, since as parents, we've all been through this. We are not a sexually charged show. It has a very warm tone so people accept it more. I'm sure we'll have some detractors," said Steven Levitan, creator and executive producer of the sitcom with Christopher Lloyd.

almost always a complete reflection of our lack of control as parents, our inability to speak kindly to our neighbors and fellow citizens or, worse, the members of our own family.

We like to pretend, particularly among our peers, that we're great examples to our kids. When our children reveal that we're not, it's embarrassing. But it's also chastening and a great reminder of why children are such a blessing. They frequently help us become better people. MOLLIE HEMINGWAY, MOMMYISH.COM

Cleaner, greener vacuum

► Lower your energy consumption with vacuums that are more efficient ► Make a difference

The standard household vacuum cleaner: Very clean, but is it green?

Vacuums capture and dispose of far more dust than brooms, but they also consume power, produce noise, and most models leave behind an endless series of dust-filled bags that need to be thrown out.

Is there a way to do this better?

"It's a product category no one really has been thinking about before as something that needs an environmental improvement," says Cecilia Nord, vice president of sustainability for Electrolux Small Appliances.

"As it turns out, you can actually achieve improvement by focusing on energy consumption, and also the materials in the product. It's not insignificant."

Her company produces greener sister versions of its entire vacuum cleaner product line. They may not yet be as widely available, but some pretty efficient, powerful machines are being produced.

"Depending on the model, we range from 33-50 per cent lower energy consumption," Nord says. "The fantastic thing is, we make this big saving in energy consumption, and only lose one percentage point in actual cleaning performance."

Electrolux is not alone.

Rainbow, Sanitaire, Filter Queen, Miele and Dyson highlight a long — and ever-growing — list of manufacturers building

Loss of cleaning power — in exchange for a 33 to 50 per cent cut in power usage — with a top-quality green vacuum cleaner.

more environmentally friendly machines.

"Historically, the consumer has been led to believe that if you have a high-wattage vacuum, it's a powerful cleaner," says Nord. "But that has nothing to do with it. It's how well it's designed that provides the cleaning performance."

Noise remains an issue, although more-efficient vacuum cleaners tend to also be slightly quieter.

And though bagless vacuums certainly exist, even vacuum bags are gradually being greened.

"We're finding renewable resources that can be transferred into materials that do the same job as non-renewable ones," she says. "We've actually started marketing a vacuum cleaner dust bag that is made out of corn starch."

There's even a designer line of cleaners — Vac from the Sea — made from plastic pollution harvested from the world's oceans.

"When we started working with recycled plastics, we realized how hard it was for us, as a manufacturer, to come by plastics of a good enough quality. We found local green organizations that are already working with this. We helped them collect plastic, and we use it to make special vacuum cleaners."

Breaking through the boy block

► Teacher urges retooled approach to raising boys in new book ► Points concerned finger at computer-crazed world

As a longtime teacher and father of four, Michael Reist has had a front-row view of the ever-changing cultural landscape and its impact on youngsters.

And with the omnipresence of the Internet, tech gadgets and video games, he believes the task of educating and parenting kids needs to adapt with the evolving times.

In his new book, Raising Boys in a New Kind of World (Dundurn), Reist is encouraging a retooled approach in both practice and thinking when it comes to rearing boys in a media-saturated culture.

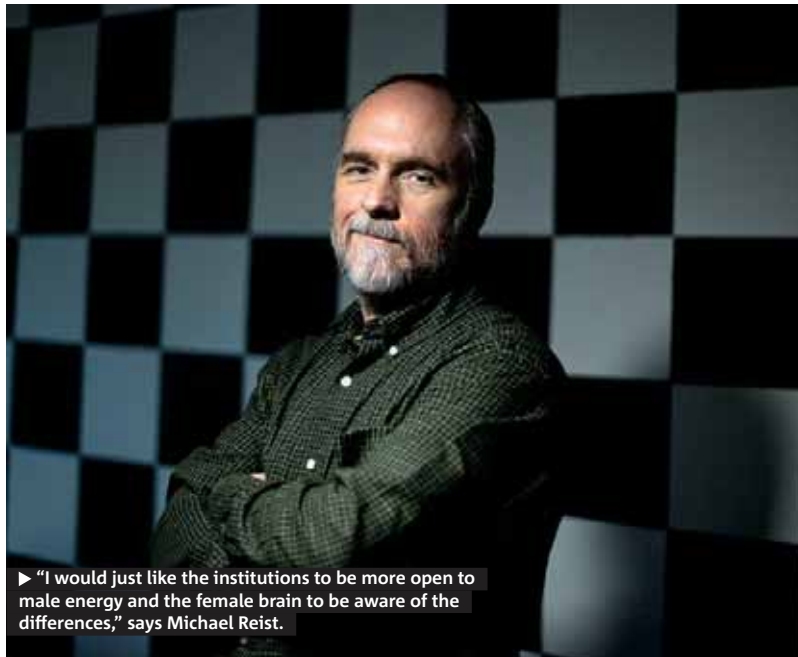

Reist has spoken extensively to parent groups and education conferences across Canada, with the main workshops centred

Plan of action

Ways to wake them up

- Reist writes that boys have a love and need for movement and prefer actions over words.
- He has observed in teaching that they tend to progress more slowly through the stages of language processing.

- He writes that much like a computer going into sleep mode, the male brain can act in a similar way when it's not stimulated.
- Cueing students visually through eye contact, verbally or through touch like a tap on the shoulder — or even just standing nearby — can help boys who may be zoning out

► "I would just like the institutions to be more open to male energy and the female brain to be aware of the differences," says Michael Reist.

"They're able to conquer level 500 of World of Warcraft ... but they come into my class where the job is to read a 300-page novel... and that's a bigger leap today than it was 20 years ago."

shared activity.

"We're getting these boys who are spatial geniuses, they come into class and they're able to conquer level 500 of World of Warcraft or Call of Duty," said Reist. "But they come into my class where the job is to read a 300-page novel and to write a 1,500-word essay, and that's a bigger leap today than it was 20 years ago."

"The culture has become more and more visual, and the culture has become more and more electronic."

Reist said one of his book's main messages is not condemning the new world, but rather empathy for today's kids who have to contend with turning off cellphones, video games, TVs and computers before settling into an assigned task.

around gender differences in learning and raising kids in a new world.

While girls have surged academically in recent years, Reist said statistics show boys aren't faring as well, and that higher percentages of girls are enrolling in universities.

Reist said cyberspace has had a huge influence. Part of the reason boys are falling behind in school is the amount of time dedicated to screens, which offer a feast of visuals and movement through space that are alluring to the male brain, he noted.

He understands parents' concerns with respect to too much screen time and recognizes the need for setting boundaries to limit usage; but Reist said there's nothing wrong with cyberspace or video games.

In the book, he outlines reasons why video games are good, such as allowing kids to relieve stress and offering an outlet for aggression. And while some see gaming as an isolating experience, he writes there is also a social aspect, as males tend to bond shoulder-to-shoulder through a

Close call for Patriots

Tom Brady got all the help he needed to get the New England Patriots into the Super Bowl.

Thank you, Billy Cundiff. The Baltimore Ravens kicker shanked a 32-yard field goal with 11 seconds left and the Patriots escaped with a 23-20 victory in the AFC championship game on Sunday.

Usually, vintage Brady doesn't need much assistance in championship settings, but the Patriots' much-maligned defence came through, and Brady's one-yard touchdown dive with 11:29 left proved to be the winning points.

"Well, I sucked pretty bad today, but our defence saved us," Brady said after throwing for 239 yards, with two interceptions and, for the first time in 36 games, no TD passes. "I'm going to try to go out and do a better job in a couple of weeks, but I'm proud of this team, my teammates."

Brady waited out the final tense minutes on the sideline, and then celebrated with the rest of his team when Cundiff's attempt went wide left. The Ravens looked on in horror.

Next up as the Patriots (15-3) chase their fourth Super Bowl trophy in Brady's and coach Bill Belichick's tenure in New England is a Super Bowl rematch against the New York Giants on Feb. 5. The Giants beat the San Francisco 49ers 20-17 in overtime on Sunday.

In their last trip to the big game, the Patriots had an 18-0 record when they were stunned by the Giants four years ago. They won the NFL championship for the 2001, 2003 and 2004 seasons. This time, they head to the Super Bowl with a 10-game winning streak.

"We're going to try to go out and kick some butt in a couple of weeks," said Brady, whose fifth trip to the Super Bowl will equal John Elway's achievement with Denver.

Manning leads Giants to NFC title

Eli Manning is headed to another Super Bowl with a shot to show the world he belongs in the same breath as Tom Brady.

Manning directed one short, final drive and Lawrence Tynes kicked a game-winning 31-yard field goal in sudden-death overtime, sending the New York Giants to the Super Bowl with a 20-17 victory over the San Francisco 49ers in the NFC championship game Sunday night.

In another tight one in this decades-old post-season rivalry, both defences made key stops before New York capitalized on another costly mistake by

San Francisco.

Manning and the Giants (12-7) will face the New England Patriots in the Super Bowl on Feb. 5 in Indianapolis. The last time the teams met for the NFL title, 2008, the Giants ended the Patriots' bid for a perfect season.

Tynes got the Giants there for a second time. He kicked the game-winning field goal in overtime at Green Bay in the 2008 NFC title game that put New York in the Super Bowl on the way to the franchise's third title.

Devin Thomas put the Giants in position. He recovered his second fumble of the game after Jacquian Williams stripped the ball from fill-in return man Kyle Williams, who also fumbled earlier to set up a New York touchdown.

"It's my second NFC championship game, my second game-winner," Tynes said. "It's amazing. I had dreams about this last night. It was from 42, not 31, but I was so nervous today before the game just anticipating this kind of game. I'm usually pretty cool, but there was something about tonight where I knew I was going to have to make a kick. Hats off to Eli, offence, defence. Great win."

Manning went 32 of 58 for 316 yards and two touchdowns in his record fifth road playoff win, New York's fifth in a row overall and fifth out of six.

Another sad day in Happy Valley

► Ex-Penn State coach Paterno dies of cancer at 85, months after his legend was shattered in sex-abuse scandal

Happy Valley was perfect for Joe Paterno, a place where he not only won more football games than any other major U.S. college coach, but won them the right way: With integrity and sportsmanship. A place where character came first, championships second.

Behind it all, however, was an ugly secret that ran counter to everything the coach stood for.

Paterno, a sainted figure at Penn State, but scarred forever by the child sex-abuse scandal that led to his stunning dismissal, died in State College, Pa., Sunday at age 85.

His death came 65 days after his son Scott said his father had been diagnosed with a treatable form of lung cancer. The cancer was found during a follow-up visit for a bronchial illness.

Mount Nittany Medical Center said in a statement that Paterno died at 9:25 a.m. of "metastatic small cell carcinoma of the lung." Metastatic indicates an illness that has spread from one part of the body to an unrelated area.

The hospital says Paterno was surrounded by family members.

Paterno had been in the hospital since Jan. 13 for observation after what his family called minor complications from his cancer treatments. Not long before that, he conducted his only interview since losing his job, with The Washington Post. Paterno was described as frail, speaking mostly in a whisper. The second half of the two-day interview was conducted bedside.

His family released a statement Sunday morning to announce his death: "His loss leaves a void in our lives that will never be filled."

"He fought hard until the end, stayed positive, thought only of others and constantly reminded everyone of how blessed his life had been," the statement said. "His ambitions were far reaching, but he never believed he had to leave this Happy Valley to achieve them. He was a man devoted to his family, his university, his players and his community."

Paterno's death came just under three months following his last victory.

Two police officers were stationed to block traffic on the street where Paterno's home stands. The officers said the family had asked there be no gathering so Paterno's relatives could grieve privately.

Paterno's sons, Scott and Jay, arrived at the house late Sunday morning. Jay Paterno, who served as his father's quarterbacks coach, was crying.

Paterno built a program based on the credo of "Success with Honor." The man won 409 games and took the Nittany Lions to 37 bowl games and two national championships. More than 250 of his players went on to the NFL.

Paterno roamed the sidelines for 46 seasons and insisted that on-field success not come at the expense of high graduation rates.

But in the middle of his 46th season, the legend was shattered. Paterno was engulfed in a child sex-abuse scandal when a former trusted assistant, Jerry Sandusky, was accused of molesting 10 boys over a 15-year span.

Outrage built quickly when the state's top cop said the coach hadn't fulfilled a moral obligation to go to the authorities when a graduate assistant, Mike McQueary, told Paterno he saw Sandusky with a young boy in the showers of the football complex in 2002.

At a preliminary hearing for school officials, McQueary testified that he had seen Sandusky attacking the child with his hands around the boy's waist but said he wasn't 100 per cent sure it was intercourse. McQueary described Paterno as shocked and saddened and said the coach told him he had "done the right thing" by reporting the encounter.

Paterno waited a day before alerting school officials and never went to police.

"You know, (McQueary) didn't want to get specific," Paterno said in the Post interview. "And to be frank with you I don't know that it would have done any good, because I never heard of, of, rape and a man. So I just did what I thought was best."

Paterno said he would retire following the 2011 season, calling it "one of the great sorrows of my life."

But university trustees fired Paterno immediately. Graham Spanier, one of the longest-serving university presidents in the nation, also was fired.

Paterno and his wife, Sue, raised five children in State College.

He walked to home games and was greeted and wished good luck by fans on the street.

He also could be abrasive and stubborn, and he had his share of run-ins with his bosses or administrators.

Calls for his retirement reached a crescendo in 2004. The next year, Penn State went 11-1 and won the Big Ten. In the Orange Bowl, PSU beat Florida State, whose coach, Bobby Bowden, was eased out after the 2009 season after 34 years and 389 wins.

Like many others, he was outlasted by Paterno.
